Report Back With blue o two

DIVING TOUR operator 'blue o two' has launched a brand new trip reports function on their website. The new function allows clients to upload reports and images from their holiday and share them with friends. A unique sounding board for every diver's personal experiences.

Not only is this a wonderful way for existing clients to share their experiences and photos, but is also a priceless source of information and genuine feedback for any diver looking for an honest holiday review.

When searching for reports, users can filter by destination, itinerary and vessel meaning that finding the most relevant review couldn't be simpler.

Dive guide co-ordinator Karin Van Beeck said:

"By the end of every safari week our guests are buzzing and often have some brilliant stories. It became clear that they would love an area to share these stories and the trip reports function provides just this. I can't wait to see the space filling with reports – hopefully I won't feature in too many!"

'blue o two' is currently the only UK based scuba diving tour operator to manage and operate its own fleet of luxury Red Sea liveaboards.

Avoid Disaster

AUSTRALIAN UNDERWATER photographer Jeff Mullins has designed a 'Leak Detector' for underwater digital camera housings. A small sensor, gives early warning of the slightest moisture (or water) gathering inside your housing. The warning is by way of an electronic circuit that triggers a Hi-Intensity LED (Light Emitting Diode) that is placed near the camera's LCD screen (easily seen when taking/reviewing photos or looking at the rear of the housing), alerting the photographer to an impending disaster. The photographer can then surface before the housing accumulates enough water to damage the camera.

Leak Detectors are available direct from Jeff via www.uwleakdetector.com or e-mail: sealink@iinet.net.au
